

I believe Stella said there had been nothing definite arranged about memorial services.

Kindest regards to you all,

Most sincerely yours,

(Sgd.) ONA H."

Lieut. Field's picture appeared in two National publications, following his death. The Roll of Honor as published in Leslie's Weekly on March 22, 1919, contains a picture of Bascom Field with these words "Capt. Bascom Lee Field, Greensboro, N. C., 105th Engineers, who was killed near Hargicourt, France." The mid week pictorial also contains his picture, under his name being the words "killed in action."

One of the most striking coincidents in connection with the death of Lieut. Field is the fact that on the same day, namely October 27, 1918, the Greensboro Daily News of Greensboro, N. C. printed a story of the death of Lieut. Field and also of the death of President E. K. Graham.

President Graham as head of the University of North Carolina was a figure that Lieut. Field, in common with hundreds of other students, worshipped. Lieut. Field died at the battle front in France. President Graham died in the midst of a fight to prepare democracy not only for war, but for peace. That two such striking figures, so closely associated in life, should have their deaths chronicle together is unusual. Two newspaper stories follow:

"Believing in the doctrine that "actions speak louder than words," Lieutenant Bascom Lee Field bravely went to his death in action on the battlefields of France on September 29, 1918. He was the second Guilford county officer to lay his life on the altar of service in the cause of world freedom.

Mr. Field in May, 1917, volunteered for service, entered the second training camp and was commissioned as first lieutenant from Oglethorpe in November of that year. He trained for artilleryman, but was later transferred to what is known as the 105 Engineers. From Sevier he went across last May and had been in active fighting for some weeks prior to his death.
